

The Production Process

The Copyeditor makes revisions and suggestions to match the paper to the official journal style and raises any questions or comments regarding content, sources and features.

The Production stage involves turning the manuscript into part of the journal—typesetting and layout, creating any art/graphics that accompany the paper, and inserting the paper into the issue. This stage may be a bit different for digital publications in contrast with print, but the principles remain the same: The paper must be formatted and made part of the journal
